

Figure 1 shows a 2D grid of points with varying density, representing a spatial distribution. The grid is composed of small, dark, square cells. The density of these cells is highest in the center and decreases towards the edges, creating a radial pattern. The overall appearance is that of a heatmap or a scatter plot with a radial gradient.

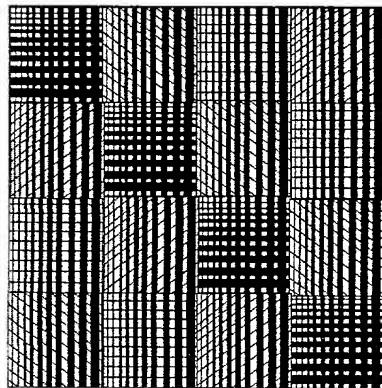

Fig. 1

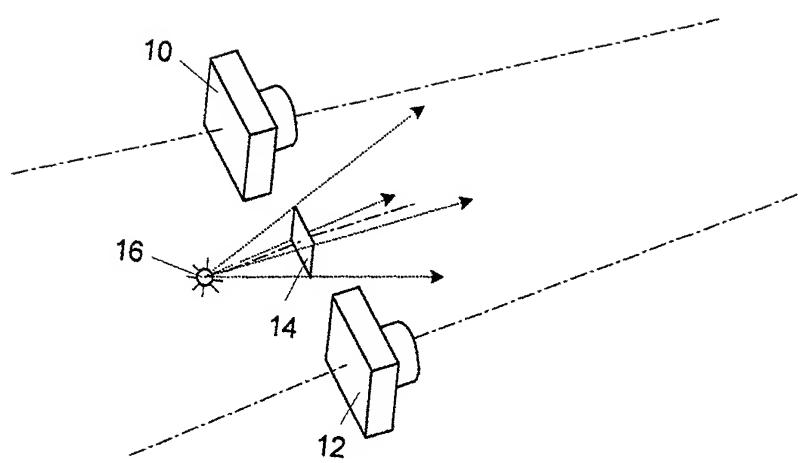

Fig. 2

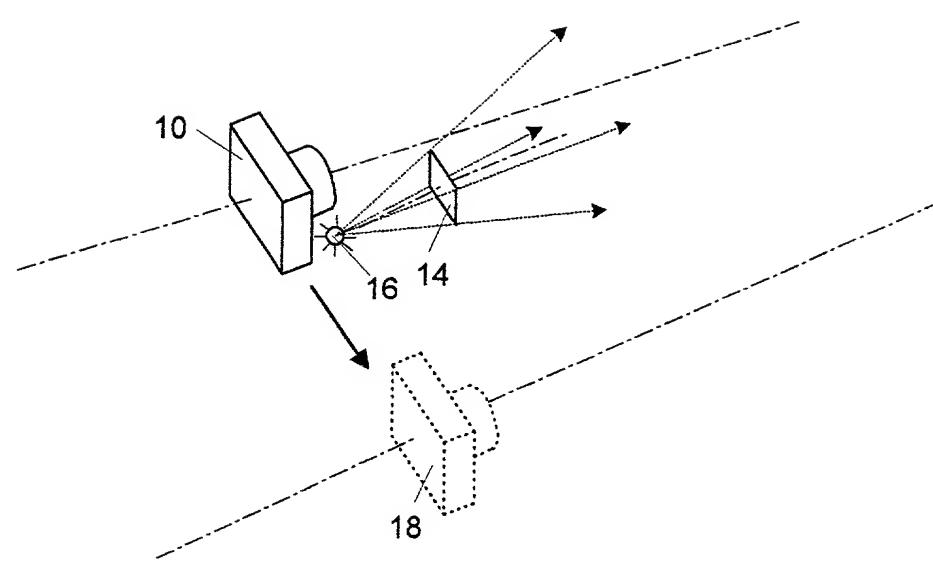

Fig. 3